

Marketing

Defined as “the activity, set of institutions, and processes for creating, communicating, delivering, and exchanging offerings that have value for customers, clients, partners, and society at large,” marketing is increasingly important in today’s competitive society. Marketing activities are fast-paced, dynamic, highly visible, and rewarding and remain essential to the survival of all organizations. Marketing specialists who can add excitement, creativity, and imagination to the flow of goods and services are essential to every organization. The Marketing Program in the Scott College of Business continually strives for excellence in its course offerings, faculty, internships and placement opportunities for graduates.

Careers

About 50 percent of individuals who achieve senior management ranks have a marketing background. Marketing has been recognized as a fast-track to top corporate executive positions since most marketing positions require a thorough knowledge of the company, the customer, and the product. Students majoring in marketing find careers in:

- business to business sales
- advertising/ media buyer
- marketing research
- e-commerce/ web marketing
- sales force management
- customer relations
- brand management
- distribution management

Graduates can further enhance their education with a Master of Business Administration degree. This improves qualifications and can speed advancement to positions such as Director of Marketing or Chief Marketing Officer.

Student Involvement

Indiana State University’s student chapter of the American Marketing Association is open to students from all majors and provides an excellent opportunity to gain marketing and leadership experience while having fun. The organization strives to provide hands-on experience in advertising, sales, new product development, research, and promotion.

Scholarships

There are several scholarships designated specifically for marketing majors and other scholarships available to Scott College of Business majors and minors. For more information go to: www.indstate.edu/business/scholarships.

The mission of the Sales and Negotiations Center is to serve as the focal point of sales education and training at Indiana State University. We do this through our community outreach and sales training, our interactions with our Sales Advisory Council, our sponsorship of Sales Career Exploration Events, and most importantly, our work with outstanding young professional who are working toward completion of one of our sales education programs.

Curriculum

The Marketing Program is designed to facilitate entry into marketing positions and long-term professional advancement. Two tracks are offered: marketing management and sales management. After completing a basic body of business courses, the student will study buyer behavior, market research, and marketing strategy. Students pursuing the marketing management track study new product and pricing strategy, promotional strategy, channel management, and complementary courses. Students selecting the sales management track study professional selling, sales force management, business negotiations, business to business marketing, and complementary courses.
