Current Research

A series of articles--and possibly one or more books--on democratization in the Middle East. (I eventually opted not to complete a book on this subject as originally proposed, but Westview Press is keeping the contract dormant and tells me that my manuscript will be welcomed in the future.)

Excerpts from reviews of books

The Middle East: Fourteen Islamic Centuries (first edition)

LaVerne Kuhnke, in Muslim World, April 1985, pp. 121-122 ("one of the most concise and attractive of recent publications ... admirable ... smoothly flowing narrative ... solidly factual and scholarly, yet lively and conversational in style ... revitalizes numerous issues ... enviable balance in the amount of space ... elegance ... a notable contribution").

Arthur Q. Larson, in Teaching History, Spring 1984, p. 42 ("a clear, spare style ... a feeling for the Middle East, not just as an occasional problem area ... thoroughness of coverage ... a marked ability to point up the 'inside' of a situation ... sharpness of insight").

Robert Olson, in the International Journal of Islamic and Arabic Studies, 1984, pp. 127-129 ("a welcome addition ... the best book of its kind which is now available ... compactness, sound analytical suppositions ... informed and accurate ... unsurpassed .... I was impressed by the scope of Perry's reading and understanding ... the best synthesis I have ever read of this [twentieth century] period--bar none .... Perry always makes the judicious and correct judgment .... At last students have an accurate assessment .... well written and very well organized ....")

Richard Millman, in the Middle East Journal, Winter 1984, pp. 168-169 ("a useful volume ... comprehensive, clearly written and accurate ... fair without being trite").

Joseph H. Escovitz, in Religious Studies Review, April 1984 ("a general survey ... but Perry does make a real attempt to mention the variety of factors involved in religious developments ....").

Patricia Risso, in Arab Studies Quarterly, Fall 1985 ("does more justice to the complexity of the Islamic heritage .... The Arab-Israeli conflict is treated with an even hand .... The majority [of students] liked the book").

T.B. Irving, in Muslim World Book Review, 1984, pp. 12-17 ("Orientalist in tone ... creeping painfully through the brambles of Western prejudice, missionary, journalistic and Zionist ... but ... an attempt to keep it balanced").

The Middle East: Fourteen Islamic Centuries (third edition)

Margaret L. Meriwether, in International Journal of Middle East Studies, February 1999 ("a clear and concise overview ... a coherent narrative ... a stimulating framework for discussion .... Perry has succeeded admirably .... Introductory surveys which are this well done are valuable").

Palestine: Continuing Dispossession

John C. Campbell, in Foreign Affairs, Fall 1986, p. 200 ("A presentation of the Palestinian case in uncompromising terms, but not in the usual form").

Mohamed El-Behairy, in International Journal of Islamic and Arabic Studies, 1987, pp. 110-112 ("candid answers ... bristles with data ... excellent .... The articles are well chosen and the analyses are superb. The editor should be congratulated for a job well done").

Briefly reviewed in the Journal of Palestine Studies, Summer 1986, p. 165 (only a description of contents, without any evaluation).

The Palestine Question: An Annotated Bibliography

Described as one of "The two most useful bibliographies" by Janice J. Terry, in a bibliographical essay published in The June 1967 War After Three Decades, ed. William W. Haddad et al. (Washington, D.C.: Association of Arab-American University Graduates, 1999).
