

Interview Preparation Guide

INDIANA STATE UNIVERSITY CAREER CENTER

FIRST IMPRESSIONS ARE EVERYTHING

It is critical to remember that first impressions matter in the interview process. The interview is not just a chance for an employer to learn more about the applicant's personal and professional attributes and whether they will be a fit for the position, but it is also the applicant's chance to better understand the position and if the goals of the company match his or her career goals, objective and skill set. This is a great opportunity to get an inside view of the company and the employee's work environment.

TYPES OF INTERVIEWS

Phone Interview

Employers often use this opportunity to screen the applicant before bringing them into an office for a lengthier face-to-face interview. General questions are asked to see if the candidate possesses the skills and gives applicants the opportunity to expound upon their résumés and talk about their strengths. Phone interviews traditionally last about half an hour.

Screening Interview

The focus of this face-to-face meeting is to determine whether the applicant's qualifications match the employer's needs and vice-versa. It is often an initial interview to determine whether an applicant will be invited for a second, more in-depth interview. This interview may last 30 minutes to an hour, but may also be longer.

Panel Interview

Common for graduate/professional school interviews, the panel interview may also be used in the professional sector. The advantage of this type of interview is that applicants get to meet more than one person at a time. Though it may be tempting to focus on just one person, candidates should be sure to make eye contact with everyone in the room.

Group Interview

A group interview allows the employer to meet with multiple interviewees at one time. The employer typically instructs the applicants to interact with each other or go around the room and answer questions. Employers are typically looking for how you interact with the other applicants. It is important to remain true to your own qualifications and not try to compete with others' answers.

HOW TO PREPARE BEFORE AN INTERVIEW

Prepare Yourself

- Interviews can be an intimidating task if you are unprepared.
- Preparation and practice are key ingredients to a successful interview. Identify potential questions and practice responding to those questions multiple times. Use Big Interview as recommended later in this guide.
- You must be able to talk about yourself and your previous work experience with confidence and enthusiasm. Never speak negatively about yourself or a past employer. It can be a small world, especially within an industry.

Know the Employer

- How long has the employer been in operation?
- Where are the organization's headquarters and other locations?
- Is it a public or private organization?
- Has the organization been in the news lately? For what reason(s)?
- What are the services/products/programs this organization provides?
- Who are its competitors? How is it doing relative to its competitors?

Know the Employer Cont'd

- What else is the organization known for such as community involvement or special programs?
- Mission and vision of the company?
- Social media presence of the company? LinkedIn?

Questions for the Interviewer*

- What are some of the qualifications you expect the ideal candidate for this position to have?
- What characteristics do individuals who are successful in this position possess?
- Could you describe the normal daily routine for this position?
- What opportunities will there be for professional development?
- How will my performance be evaluated? How often? By whom?
- What is the culture and reputation of the office?
- What are the next steps in the hiring process?
- What do you love about working here? How did this position become available?

*Do not ask the employer any questions about salary or benefits. If they bring it up you can answer their questions using the research you conducted on salary.

Aptitude and Skills Testing

Occasionally a company will have you take an aptitude, skills, or even a personality test. It's common for students going into a technical or financial field to be given math or analytical skills tests at the interview. You can ask prior to the interview if you will be taking any tests during the interview process.

BEHAVIORAL BASED INTERVIEWING

The basic premise behind behavioral interviewing is that past situations predict future performance. These types of questions are more probing and boil down to three main areas: Can you do the job? Will you love the job? Can we work with you?

C-A-R Strategy for Answering QuestionsCIRCUMSTANCE

- Describe a specific situation you were directly involved in and recount it as it occurred. What and who was involved? Tell the interviewer about a particular situation that relates to the question. Use examples from past internships, work experience, classes, team involvement and community service.

ACTION

- What needed to be done? What did you do to solve the situation? Always emphasize your strengths and your specific actions. Have success stories prepared ahead of time that represent your skills, qualities and characteristics.

RESULT

- What happened as a result of your behavior? What did you learn from the situation?

Common Interview Questions

- Tell me about yourself and why you're interested in this job/company (education, experience, background, etc.).
- How has your college and work experience prepared you this position/internship?
- What do you consider to be your greatest challenge or weakness? How are you going about improving upon it?
- Describe for me a situation where you made a mistake. How did you handle that mistake and what was the resolution?
- Give an example of a group/team project you were involved in where the members had differing approaches. How did you handle the situation?
- How would you describe your leadership style? Tell me about a time when you effectively exhibited this style of leadership?
- Tell me about a situation in which you had to deal with a very upset customer, co-worker, or team member. How did you resolve the issue?

Common Interview Questions Cont'd

- What new skills or ideas do you bring to this position (internship or graduate program) that another candidate may not be able to offer?

ILLEGAL INTERVIEW QUESTIONS

What to do?

It can be uncomfortable when asked an inappropriate question during an interview. It is important to assess what kind of information an employer is seeking in asking these questions. For example, if an employer asks if you are planning on having children, they may be interested in whether or not you will be able to travel or have flexibility in the job. You can address this issue without having to answer the question. For instance, a possible reply could be “If you are worried about whether or not I will be available for business trips, the answer is yes, I will be able to travel.” It gives the employer the necessary information and also directs the line of questioning away from the initial question.

Additional Examples of Illegal Questions

- What is your birthdate?
- Are you or other family member’s naturalized citizens?
- Where were you and your parents born?
- What is your religious affiliation or denomination?
- Who do you live with? Do you have your own home or rent?
- What is your marital status?
- Do you have any children?
- What is your race?

FINAL ADVICE

- Practice multiple times before your interviews.
- Answer questions honestly, thoroughly and sincerely. If you don’t know the answer, ask if you may return to it at the conclusion of the interview.
- Be polite, tactful and sincere. Eye contact is also very important.
- Drive to the location before the interview to see how traffic is and where to park.
- Remember that your interview begins the moment you leave the house. You never know who you will meet on your way into the building.
- Have a padfolio to take notes, have extra copies of your résumé on hand, and a reference sheet. A padfolio is also a great place to have prepared questions for the interviewer stored.
- Send written thank you letters out immediately following your interview and make sure they are addressed properly. A sample thank you letter is on the final page of this document.
- An email thank you letter is acceptable if the company has indicated they are going to make their decision quickly, but an employer will never complain about getting a hand-written thank you note.
