Student organization activities move to virtual format

All Indiana State University student organization events and activities must be conducted entirely in a virtual format, according to a memo issued by the Division of Student Affairs on Friday. No in-person student organization activities are permitted, effective Nov. 13 through Dec. 12.

The memo to student organization members, officers, and advisors states that decisions regarding student organization activity for the Spring 2021 semester will be examined during the semester break. Resources in the student organization portal Treehouse, as well as Student Affairs staff, are available to help organizations during this transition.

“The health, safety, and well-being of our students, faculty, and staff must be our first priority and this measure will assist in keeping members of our university community as protected as possible,” wrote J. Brooks Moore, Associate Vice President for Student Affairs.

ISU recently implemented some changes in response to the reinstatement of pandemic restrictions in Indiana. They include shifting winter commencement to a virtual format, encouraging the faculty to move this week’s classes online, and reminding staff of alternative work options.

The Student Recreation Center closed on Friday and will reopen on January 4.
